Detection of candidate genes for growth and carcass traits using genome-wide association strategy in Chinese Simmental beef cattle

Wengang Zhang[A], Lingyang Xu[A], Huijiang Gao[A], Yang Wu[A,B], Xue Gao[A], Lupei Zhang[A], Bo Zhu[A],

Yuxin Song[A], Jinshan Bao[C], Junya Li[A,D], and Yan Chen[A,D]

[A]Institute of Animal Science, Chinese Academy of Agricultural Science, No. 2 Yuanmingyuan West

Road, Haidian District, Beijing 100193, China.

[B]Queensland Brain Institute, The University of Queensland, Brisbane, Qld 4072, Australia.

[C]Veterinary Bureau of Wulagai Precinct in Xilin Gol League, Wulagai 026321, China.

[D]Corresponding author. Email: JL1@iascaas.net.cn; chenyan0204@163.com
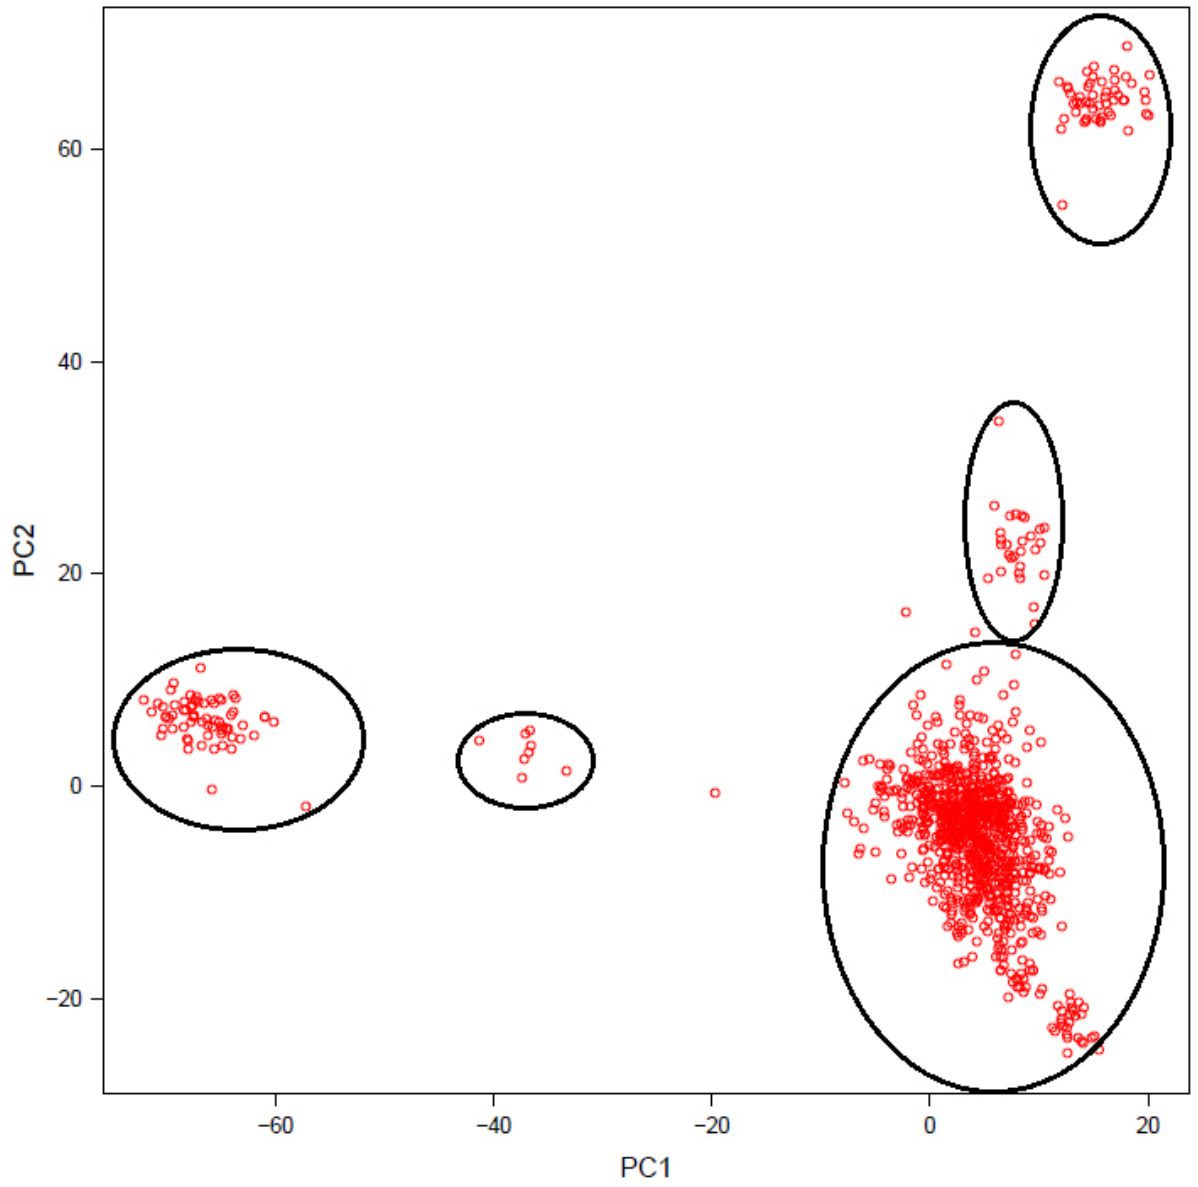

Fig. S1. Scatterplot based on first two PCA score. Clustering analysis was implemented based on the first three PCA score, and all individuals were divided into five clusters indicating population stratification in Chinese Simmental beef cattle.