

more and more fully recognized in all parts of the world, New Zealand has as yet taken no steps for its encouragement, and no financial assistance has so far been given to private workers in any department of science. When it is remembered that Captain Hutton unselfishly devoted himself throughout his lifetime to the advancement of Natural Science in New Zealand, and that no worker has done more to increase the world's knowledge of the geology, zoology, and botany of New Zealand than he did, it is peculiarly appropriate that his name should be associated with the first fund established in New Zealand for encouragement of further study of these subjects. We in Australia are almost equally indebted to Captain Hutton, having reaped a portion of the benefits of his work, and the appeal should have equal force here. Contributions should be forwarded to Dr. Chilton, hon. treasurer Hutton Memorial Research Fund, Canterbury College, Christchurch, N.Z.
