

PACIFIC CONSERVATION BIOLOGY

Volume 25 • Issue 1 • 2019

CONTENTS

Editorial: Advocacy in conservation science: an introduction to the Special Issue P. I. Boon	1
Nature conservation in a brave new (post-truth) world: arguments for and against public advocacy by conservation biologists P. I. Boon	7
Values, credibility, and ethics: public advocacy and conservation science H. F. Recher	22
The reverse precautionary principle: science, the environment and the salmon aquaculture industry in Macquarie Harbour, Tasmania, Australia J. B. Kirkpatrick, L. K. Kriwoken and J. Styger	26
Review: An advocate for taxonomic research in Australia P. Hutchings	34
Dingo singing: the howl of the advocate A. Wardell-Johnson, C. Archer-Lean and J. Carter	37
The contest for the tall forests of south-western Australia and the discourses of advocates G. Wardell-Johnson, A. Wardell-Johnson, B. Schultz, J. Dortch, T. Robinson, L. Collard and M. Calver	50
Perspective: Can a critical reading of Zoopolis by Donaldson and Kymlicka lead to advocating dialogue between animal rights theorists and zoologists? D. Lunney	72
Perspective: The defamatory potential of ad hominem criticism: guidance for advocacy in public forums H. C. Finn	92
Preparing for advocacy, resisting attack B. Martin	105
Retraction notice to 'Watching the tide roll away – advocacy and the obfuscation of evidence.' P. A. Gell	111