

10.1071/WR22055

Wildlife Research

Supplementary Material

The influence of camera-trap flash type on the behavioural response, detection rate and individual recognition of Eld's deer

Rachel Ladd^{A,}, Paul Meek^{A,B}, and Luke K.-P. Leung^A*

^ASchool of Agriculture and Food Sciences, The University of Queensland, Gatton, Qld 4343, Australia.

^BVertebrate Pest Research Unit, NSW Department of Primary Industries, PO Box 530, Coffs Harbour, NSW 2450, Australia.

*Correspondence to: Rachel Ladd School of Agriculture and Food Sciences, The University of Queensland, Gatton, Qld 4343, Australia Email: r.ladd@uq.net.au

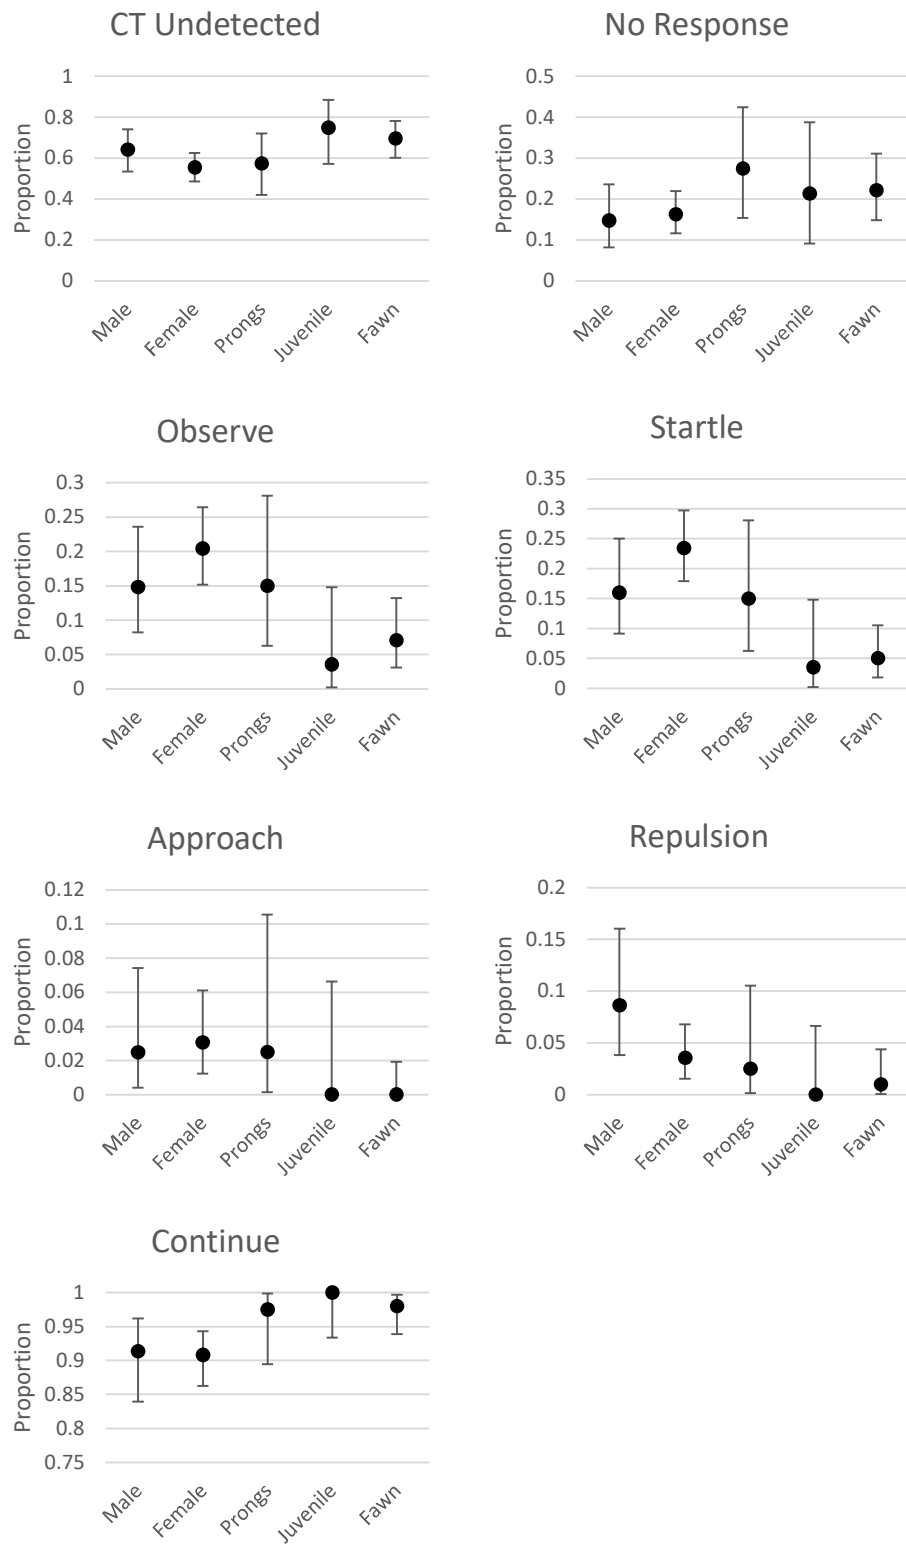

Figure 1: Behavioural responses as a proportion of the population according to age and sex class with 95% confidence intervals. Note that scales differ between categories

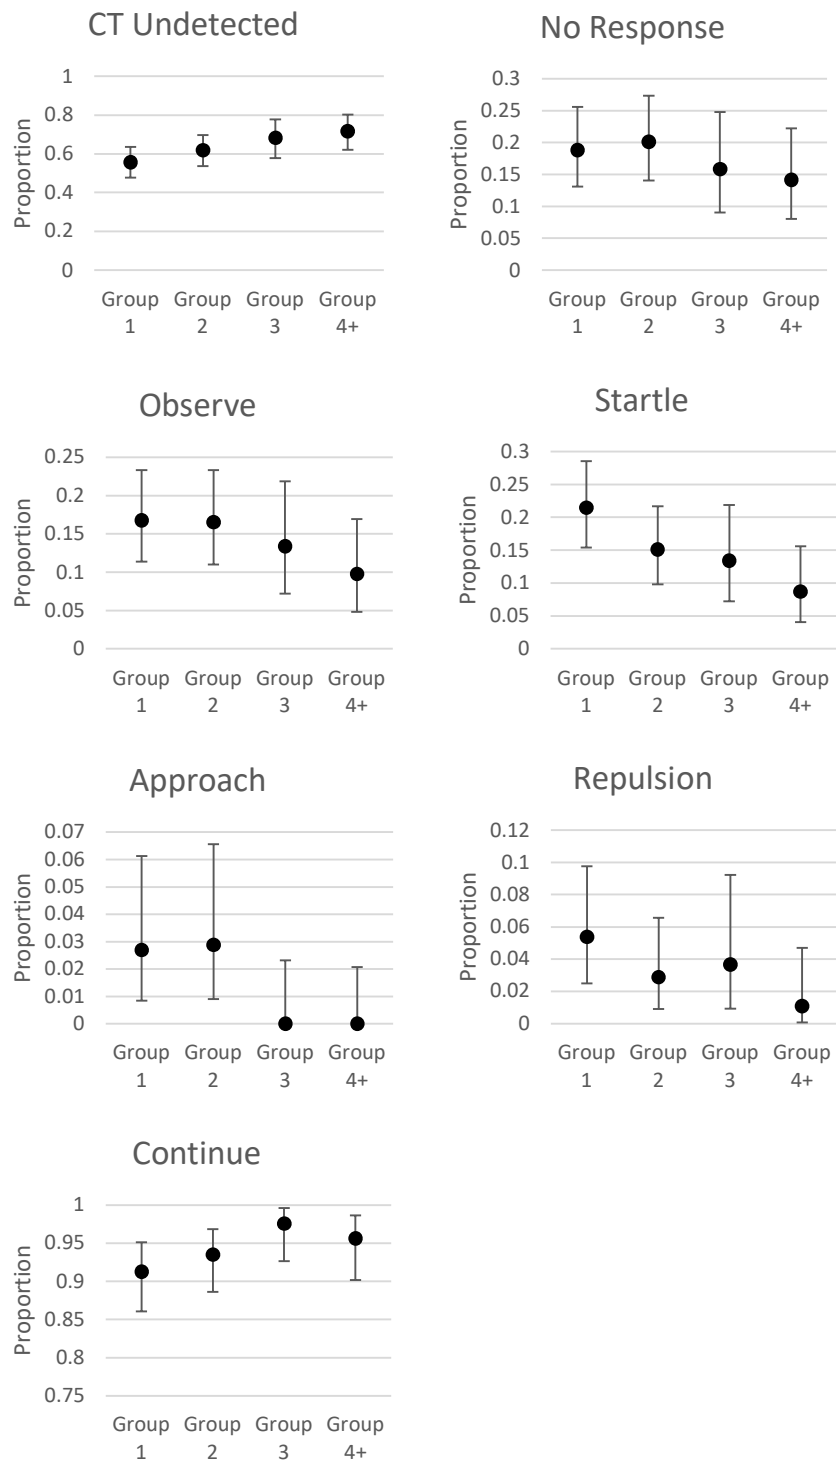

Figure 2: Behavioural responses as a proportion of the population according to group size with 95% confidence intervals. Note that the scale differs between categories